An independent committee has recommended 12-month suspensions, covering the first half of the campaign, for English Football League and Premier League clubs who do not repair damaged pitches within the same season. That allows clubs to have next season free of damage for the first five months of the campaign. The Premier League is working on its own programme of working to improve the state of the game's pitches. And, with its own penalties, comes the possibility of making some a permanent recommendation by next season. This is because the league will not be able to appeal against penalties under its own disciplinary processes. The independent committee was made up of expert advisers from the game's governing body, the Professional Footballers' Association, match officials, a club representative and a representative of the Football Supporters' Federation. It has reported that a "significant proportion" of pitches damaged in English football are beyond repair. The independent committee's report also recommends an education programme for referees, which was led by the Sport Resolutions Centre, and a shift in the balance of play away from the back post to coincide with the 2018/19 campaign. However, as the parasite population increases and more cell divisions occur, and the number of Mf elements drops significantly, then the average Mf element copy number is increased significantly. Both our data and data available from other studies \[[@b9-mjm1202p122],[@b10-mjm1202p122],[@b15-mjm1202p122]\] indicate that the population of Mf elements remain steady or even decrease over time; however, when the total number of Mf elements is accumulated over time, the average copy number of these elements increases. Mf elements are transposable elements in the M. musculus genome. A recent study by Khim et al. \[[@b10-mjm 570a42141b
