The Uruguay international has been charged with racially-aggravated improper conduct after making his 'gesture' on the pitch against Manchester United in April. "What people don't understand is how the reception from the crowd can be different depending on what the team is doing. For example, when he [Suarez] scored the goal against Manchester United, it wasn't a celebration, it was the fans just expressing their joy at his goal," explained Toshack. "But when the player scores against Newcastle, he gets told off by the fans. So I want to say to the fans: "The team is doing well, try to show some affection, they're doing it for you and for the club. "As long as they get encouragement from the crowd when the team is doing well, I feel they've got a point. I know football is a business, but in the dressing room we need to be together." In a new project I'm working on I'm trying to use some data-persistence systems and got SQLite (and H2) and PostgreSQL (and H2) as candidates. I'm getting data from a MySQL database using JDBC and I use the same MySQL queries in my SQLite and PostgreSQL tests. All is well, but when I tried to use H2 (as SQLite is a fork of H2) I'm getting some really hard time with SQL queries - they don't work! H2 (v3.3.6.2) and PostgreSQL (v9.5.18) H2 throws exception: Caused by: org.h2.jdbc.JdbcSQLException: Table "HS_DEV.AUDIT" not found; SQL statement: select user_id from (select user_id from pg_roles where rolname = 'a') a [42122-168] (the [42122-168] are the last numbers of the exception trace). (the 42122-168 is the first number of the last line of the trace) SQLite (v3.13.2) and PostgreSQL (v9.5.18) SQLite throws exception with the same query (by the way the data is in the same table) Ca
