This morning the Trump administration announced that they are reversing Obama's executive order. They will halt the resettlement of refugees in the U.S. According to the administration, the order was meant to increase the vetting process of refugees by allocating more resources. But they say that this is now unnecessary because the additional security procedures will not have an effect on their overall process. This is in contradiction to a request the Obama administration made months ago to add 1,000 additional State Department staff. In addition, they are shifting responsibilities to the Department of Homeland Security. While the order is likely good news for those currently resettling refugees (especially the Syrians who were still coming to the U.S. on short notice), it is unclear if this was the only reason for the administration's decision. It is certainly a move they can make because they have the power to change the executive order. Effect of catalase on cell number and viability of Leishmania (Leishmania) amazonensis. Catalase activity, higher in promastigotes of Leishmania (Leishmania) amazonensis, is higher than in promastigotes of Leishmania (Leishmania) chagasi, suggesting that this enzyme could be involved in antileishmanial activity. The in vitro effect of catalase on the cell proliferation of L. (L.) amazonensis promastigotes was observed by neutral red test. Treatment with catalase (50 and 100 units/mL) for 18 h lowered growth of promastigotes. The lowest number of promastigotes was observed in cells treated with 100 U/mL. The number of parasites in culture treated with 100 U/mL was very low and reduced considerably.
