Delve deep into this dangerous dungeon, battling deadly monsters and discovering epic loot. Cavesweeper is a unique roguelike puzzle game that is easy to play but difficult to master. No two playthroughs will ever be the same in this addictive, infinitely replayable RPG puzzler! For the competitive players, leaderboards exist - can you make it to the top and stay there? Includes 40 in-game quests, with corresponding Steam achievements!

The puzzle battle gameplay works as follows: each of the 25 tiles on the field is a certain color. When you correctly reveal a tile, a number will be displayed inside that tile. This number tells you how many of the 4 surrounding tiles (North, South, East, and West - NO DIAGONALS!) are that same color. When you incorrectly guess a tile, you will be hit by the monster you're currently battling. Different monsters have different properties, effects, and so on. Throughout the dungeon you will find equipment which will aid you in battle, for example by allowing you to regenerate hit points or have armor to reduce the damage you take from enemies.

Conveniently, the game auto-saves after each battle. You can exit out of the application and resume later. If you enjoy Picross, Sudoku, or Minesweeper, you will love this game! Friday, January 27, 2011 Northern Department Produces "Geoanalitica: How to Practice Art" The department of art at the University of Northern Iowa recently published a book called "Geoanalitica: How to Practice Art." It is currently being published, so it is not available online. The abstract from the book is: The overall goal of this publication is to teach the reader to learn how to practice "art" through critique and analysis of a selection of pieces from contemporary art and architecture. This book presents a rigorous response to questions about art teaching pedagogy and curriculum in a multi-media context. The first section of this publication addresses a number of problems that exist in both the academic and non-academic community. This book is for artists, art educators and art students, as well as art authorities, curators and general members of the public. By the end of this publication, the reader will have learned how to practice art through critique and analysis of a selection of pieces from contemporary art and architecture. You might want to take a look at the book to get a bit of a feel for it. It is only available by going to Northern's website and purchasing it directly.

Jean Cadé Jean Cadé (born December 2, 1939) is a Quebec writer and journalist. The son of Georges Cadé and Suzanne Van-Brits, he was born in Plessisville. His father died when he was 14 and his sister Antoine Cadé became the victim of a most brutal murder. Cadé studied Latin at the Collège de Sainte-Catherine-de-la-Jacques-Cartier, then at the Université de Montréal. After earning a diploma in education from the Normal School of Père Léonard-Tache, he became a teacher and then a journalist at the newspaper Le Devoir, first on the editorial board. From 1980 to 1982 he was the Quebec correspondent for the magazine Journalism. He was a columnist at Télé-Québec from
